It's almost impossible to go past the old mill without being flooded with thoughts of days gone by. With the sun breaking through after a morning rain, the road to the mill would be busy . . . and Grandpa's wagon would pause here and there to greet friends and talk of harvest. From on top the sacks of grain we took it all in . . . and wished that the ride would never end. Life seemed at its very best on those days At The Mill.
