Walking through the old garden spot I was flooded with childhood memories of this place: the smell of roses and ripe tomatoes and freshly worked soil; the taste of a sweet carrot wiped "clean" on a pant leg; the sound of a bumblebee dancing among the hollyhocks; the feeling of being together. There were both fights and fits of laughter out here. We were scolded and we were praised. At the time I thought we were raising vegetables. Looking back, I see Mom and Dad raising a family . . . Home Grown.
